

Oct. 7, 2016

By NCTA News Service

NCTA hosts Discovery Day on Oct. 10

Curtis, Neb. – High school students are invited to explore their academic and financial options Monday at the Nebraska College of Technical Agriculture.

The first “Discovery Day” for the 2016-2017 year will be at the Curtis campus from 9 a.m. to 2 p.m. Students, their families, guidance counselors and youth leaders are invited to participate.

Students will take guided tours, meet with instructors, view student groups and opportunities at an activities fair, and learn more about applying for federal financial aid (FAFSA).

Andrew Hunzeker, outreach services manager with EducationQuest Foundation, will meet with parents and students in answering questions about financial aid. The day includes opportunity for individual consultations with faculty advisors.

Students who submit applications to attend NCTA in 2017 will be eligible for a drawing of one $250 textbook certificate to be redeemed next fall at the NCTA Bookstore.

Pre-registration is requested for Discovery Day tours and noon lunch at Aggie Dining at <http://ncta.unl.edu/campus-culture>. Activities begin at the Nebraska Agriculture Industry Education Center at University and Siminoe Streets with registration at 8:30 a.m.

News article link: <http://go.unl.edu/smbw>

#

Source: Tina Smith, admissions and recruitment coordinator, tsmith24@unl.edu

Writer: Mary Crawford, NCTA News, 308-367-5231, Mcrawford@unl.edu

NCTA.DiscoveryDay.10.07.16

NCTA students walk to economics class at Ag Hall (Crawford/NCTA News)