

Bruning Farms of Bruning, Nebraska is seeking a full-time manager/herdsman.

We are a registered Angus and commercial cow herd, calving in both the spring and fall. Although our business is predominantly cow/calf production, we also operate a small feedlot (October-May) and hay production (May-September).

As a fourth generation family farm, we value enterprising spirit, positivity and teamwork. The ideal candidate would be willing to help facilitate and advance a diverse cattle operation.

Concepts of artificial insemination and embryo transfer are fundamentals the employee will be asked to help with. The candidate does not need to be well-versed or trained in these areas, but does need to be willing to learn or help as needed.

Our spring calving season begins in mid-January, culminating in April. The herdsman's responsibilities will revolve around but not be limited to the management of the calving season while overseeing the health and well being on each calf and cow.

A small feedlot is operated from October through May to feed out our own calves, essentially to provide carcass quality data based on genetic decisions and also the development of bulls and heifers. The candidate would be a manager of this feeding operation and oversee the health and well-being of each individual animal.

Salary and benefits are negotiable. Please provide 3 references along with resume in submission to reiss@bruningfarms.com or mail to Bruning Farms, 6062 Road Y, Bruning, NE 68322.

For more information or questions regarding the position, please feel free to contact Reiss Bruning, 402-768-3332 or learn more about our operation at www.bruningfarms.com.
